THE AP RYSS PILOT PROGRAM

Ryss engaged Magsmen for a pilot brand-strategy program and introduced two founder-led food businesses to begin the engagement. The mandate was simple: understand each business from the ground up, and show what real brand-building looks like in practice.

*Both businesses were, at the time,
run purely from a sales point of view not a brand point of view.*

CLIENT 1

Sustain Eats

Founder: Shabhana

Sustainable, farmer-sourced everyday food

CLIENT 2

SAS Millet Blooms

Founder: Sumanjali

Millet-based cookies, brownies,
cakes & healthy snacks

Understanding the founder, the market, and the gap between good intentions and a clear brand.

Market Snapshot

What our research found before any design work began

We began with market research into how both businesses were operating, how they were positioned, and where they stood in the category today. Across the board, the pattern was the same: strong intent, weak articulation.

“

“They are not trying to build another food company. Their intention is to make healthy, sustainable, and naturally sourced food accessible while supporting local farmers and promoting better lifestyles. The purpose exists, the market simply cannot perceive it yet.”

Attributes both brands were already using in the market:

Organic

Sustainable

Healthy

Traditional

Farmer-Sourced

The gap: many brands say the same words. The question we had to answer was, why should someone remember this brand instead of another healthy-food brand?

Our Diagnosis

Why the brand wasn't landing, despite good products

01

The Founder's Intent Is Clear

The purpose behind the business is genuine and well formed. The challenge is that the market cannot yet perceive it.

02

Positioning Needs Sharpening

Organic, sustainable, healthy, traditional, farmer-sourced — good attributes, but shared by many competitors in the category.

03

Digital Presence Is Weak

The products have real potential, but the story of the founders, sourcing, farmer ecosystem, and health philosophy isn't yet visible online.

04

It's a Clarity Problem, Not a Product Problem

The overall observation: this is not a product issue. It is a positioning and communication issue that a strong brand can solve.

From Two Clients

to One Flagship Brand-Creation Project

After the initial work with both founders, the Ryss team asked Magsmen to demonstrate one complete, end-to-end brand creation project.

SAS Millet Blooms was selected to become that flagship case — the project this presentation documents in full, from first insight to finished identity.

STEP 1

Deep-dive meeting with Sumanjali to understand every detail of the business.

STEP 2

Dedicated sessions with founder and strategy team to define brand clarity.

STEP 3

Full discovery framework applied — audience, economics, hero products, channels, scale.

STEP 4

Brand story, name meaning, visual identity and go-to-market plan built from that foundation.

Strategy Changes Everything

Founder Meeting

A direct conversation with Sumanjali to source the brand from the business itself

There was no pre-written brand story for SAS. Rather than inventing one from a boardroom, Magsmen sat with the founder and the strategy team to draw the story out of the real business — the recipes, the choices behind the ingredients, and the reasons the company exists.

SAS

What the founder meeting was designed to uncover:

Who the business genuinely exists to serve

Beyond a generic
“health-conscious” label

What makes the products worth remembering

The taste and ingredient choices behind every recipe

Why the founder started this, in her own words

The personal motivation
the market never sees

What the business needs to grow sustainably

Cost, capacity and channel realities behind the brand

The Discovery Framework

Six areas covered with Sumanjali to build the strategic foundation

01

Define the Primary Customer

Focused on children, parents and health-conscious families rather than trying to speak to everyone.

02

Understand Unit Economics

Raw material, packaging, labour, salaries, marketing and operations mapped to find true cost per product.

03

Identify Hero Products

Ragi cookies, brownies and other millet-based products singled out to lead as the face of the brand.

04

Sales & Revenue Planning

Daily production, monthly sales, revenue targets and annual projections modelled for a sustainable business.

05

Build Multiple Sales Channels

Expos, exhibitions, physical stores, existing customers, online, schools, colleges and offices — reducing single-channel risk.

06

Focus on Scalability

Production capacity, monthly output, investment needs and operational readiness assessed for growth.

Turning the founder's intent into a name that means something, and a story people can remember.

Crafting a Name Into a Story

Giving three letters a meaning worth remembering

SAS had a name, but no story behind it. We needed language the founder could use with total confidence — so that whenever anyone asks “what does SAS stand for?”, there is a ready, meaningful answer.

We explored several directions before arriving at the one that fit the brand best.

EXPLORED

Select · Awesome · Snacks

Positions the brand on curation and quality of choice.

Focuses on choice and quality.

EXPLORED

Safe · All-Natural · Snacks

Leads with ingredient trust and food safety.

Highlights natural and safe ingredients.

FINAL DIRECTION

Sweet · Awesome · Snacks

Chosen: leads with taste first, without losing the natural, wholesome promise.

Memorable, positive and taste-led.

The SAS Brand Story

The narrative that now anchors every conversation about the brand

Every great recipe starts with a simple choice. For us, that choice was to redefine what it means to enjoy a treat. Too often we are told that 'healthy' means giving up on taste, and that 'sweet' has to mean packed with refined chemicals. We founded SAS Millet Blooms to break that rule.

From our very first batch of home-baked goodies, our mission has been simple: to bridge the gap between pure, natural farming and your daily kitchen table, crafting clean treats that make you smile without a single ounce of guilt.

Smiles, Naturally

What SAS Means to Us

Our name is our daily kitchen promise

S Sweet

We believe life should be celebrated naturally. We skip refined white sugars completely, sweetening our bakes with honest, pure alternatives like jaggery and desi khand.

Naturally sweet,
honestly made.

A Awesome

From the rich crunch of our ghee-roasted almonds to the fudgy melt of our chocolate brownies, we craft flavours that are unapologetically delicious.

Crafted with care,
made to delight.

S Snacks

We want to be your companion throughout the day — a crispy tea-time ragi cookie, a savoury evening boondi mixture, or a morning slice of fresh millet bread.

Made for every moment,
anytime, anywhere.

Brand Architecture

Built to Scale Beyond the First Product Line

A name only carries weight once the story behind it is strong. Now that SAS has a clear, deliberate meaning, it becomes a foundation the business can build on. Future product lines and sub-categories can carry the SAS name with an added suffix, and inherit the same trust and recognition — rather than starting from zero each time.

A strong core story today means every future name built on it starts already trusted.

Design

From a hand-drawn concept to a finished visual identity — every curve intentional, every colour considered.

Logo Conceptualization

From grain to mark — the thinking behind every curve

Start With the Millet

The core ingredient of the brand — the millet grain — became the starting reference point for the mark's silhouette.

Build the 'S' in the Grain

The grain's natural curve was shaped into a flowing 'S' — the first letter of the name, hidden inside the ingredient itself.

Let the Triangle Become a Circle

Three points of a triangle are positioned so the eye completes them into a circle —echoing the round form of a biscuit or cookie.

Blend It Organically

The grain shape and the triangle are merged into one continuous form, so the mark reads as organic and hand-crafted, not mechanical.

Logo Conceptualization

From grain to mark — the thinking behind every curve

The mark was not chosen from a library of stock symbols - it was drawn from scratch, shape by shape, to carry meaning specific to SAS. Every line was placed with intent.

“I began this journey because I wanted to feed my family food that was honest. When I saw other mothers searching for sweets that didn’t compromise their children’s well-being, I realized this was not just a business — it was a responsibility. SAS is a mother’s promise scaled up for every family to share.”
